Description of Property and Justification: (Please attach map and photo)

The Dumbhundred Historic District, located on the north side of the City of Cumberland, Maryland, has been the subject of numerous earlier survey efforts. All prior efforts have consistently found that the district is significant. These findings are also supported by a formal determination of eligibility by the Keeper of the National Register of Historic Places dated August 3, 1981.

Included among the early surveys are the "1976 Historic Survey of Cumberland; Heritage Press, Heritage Weekly" and a report prepared in 1981 by Ms. Peggy Bruns Weissman of the Maryland Historical Trust. These earlier documents, and others, are available in the Maryland Historical Trust's Library and should be referenced for additional information on the Dumbhundred Historic District. The latter report described the neighborhood as follows:

The Dumbhundred district...has traditionally been a distinct neighborhood with its own special character. Primarily residential, it contains a concentration of working and middle class housing dating from the mid-19th century to about 1930. Many of these buildings housed the brewery workers, railroad workers, glass blowers and others employed in Cumberland's industries during the time of the city's greatest industrial growth and the area thus reflects and is associated with aspects of the city's history and development. In addition, the district also holds associations with Wright Butler (1868-1932), the prominent and prolific local architect who was born in the district and who designed several houses here, including his own home at 205 Columbia Street which is listed on the National Register of Historic Places.

It should be noted that both of these earlier studies also point out that Wright Butler designed the Allegany County Court House as well and a number of Queen Anne houses along Columbia Street. Both studies also establish that another locally significant historical architect, George Sansbury, is associated with the Dumbhundred Historic District for the modest houses he designed west of Valley Street.

The 1981 report by Ms. Peggy Bruns Weissman goes further to describe the architectural character and significance of the Dumbhundred Historic District as follows:

Comprised mainly of modest vernacular buildings and builders' houses...the district's streetscapes are characterized by a juxtaposition of house types and time periods. Several standard house forms are found, however, which reflect different eras in the area's history and which reoccur throughout the district, serving as a unifying element for the district. Despite the mixture of architecture, the district's streetscapes are very cohesive, with uniformity in scale, size, height (two-three stories), setback (close to the street and to other buildings), small yard size, density, building materials (brick, frame, and log) and residential character. There are few gaps or losses in the streetscapes and few modern intrusions; most buildings either remain intact or have only minor, reversible, exterior alterations and retain their form and some detailing. The Dumbhundred district, then, clearly represents a significant and distinguishable entity; possess integrity of location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling and association; and conveys a strong sense of time and place.

The survey efforts undertaken to develop this updated determination of eligibility were primarily intended to compare the district's current level of integrity to the description above and to examine the boundaries for possible expansion. With a few minor exceptions, the integrity of the district was found to be as high as that described in the earlier reports. Although there are still several examples of properties that have been compromised by artificial materials, inappropriate alterations or substantial deterioration, the majority of the houses and other buildings within the district still retain a high degree of integrity. In addition, there are still only a very few modern intrusions within the district.

On the other hand, the boundaries used in the earlier studies were determined to be too limited for a variety of reasons. Most importantly, neither research nor general observation revealed a reason to limit the district to the streets and properties contained within the earlier boundaries. Upon close comparison, it was also found that the earlier boundary maps and lists of inclusive street addresses provided some conflicting information. Finally, the architectural styles, approximate age and massing of many buildings surrounding the earlier district boundaries provided justification for expansion of the district. The revised, more inclusive, boundaries, which are based upon existing physical constraints, are defined as follows:

Southern Boundary: the north side of Henderson Avenue, from Franklin Street on the west to Bedford Street on the east.

Eastern Boundary: the west side of Bedford Street from Henderson Avenue on the south to Independence Street on the north.

Northern Boundary: the north side of Independence Street from Bedford Street on the east to the line formed by the northern boundary of the Saint Patrick Cemetery and on to the north side of Sylvan Avenue.

Western Boundary: the east side of Franklin Street from the north side of Sylvan Avenue on the north to the north side of Henderson Avenue on the south.

Please refer to the attached map for further clarification of the revised Dumbhundred Historic District boundaries. Other streets within the district boundaries include: Bond Street, Chestnut Street, Columbia Avenue, Columbia Street, Fairview Avenue, Furnace Street, Knox Street, Lena Street, Pear Street, Pulaski Street, Shriver Avenue, Sylvan Avenue, Valley Street and Walnut Street.

Given the high degree of integrity, all properties within the district boundaries were deemed contributing to the significance of the historic district. The only non-contributing elements were vacant lots (mostly located on Henderson Avenue) and the properties which were either less than fifty years of age or very significantly compromised and located at the following specific addresses:

1 Columbia Street
230 Valley Street
244 Columbia Street
245 Columbia Street
246 Columbia Street
313 Franklin Street
403 Pulaski Street
407 Walnut Street
415 Independence Street
417 Chestnut Street
514 Columbia Avenue
614 Shriver Street
615 Shriver Street
617 Sylvan Avenue
626 Columbia Avenue

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Dumbhundred district located in the north end of the City of Cumberland is an area noted for its mixture of architectural styles and periods and for its superb streetscapes. An area of simple frame and brick houses, the district has many of the qualities of European hill towns with its dense housing set on steep slopes. Independence Street for example is set into the hillside and offers a juxtaposition of gabled and shed-roofed houses. (E-1) Mountainous views are an important part of this district; it is seldom that, even in this tightly defined urban situation, there is not a view of nearby ridges and distinct streetscapes. (E-2) The streetscapes are rich in detail: brick sidewalks, end-blocked cornices, elaborate brackets, brick label molds, shaped windows, lintels, and stone walls are evident. Columbia Street is a particularly fine example. (E-3) Near the intersection with Bedford Street, Columbia Street is particularly interesting as the curving street strictly defined by houses, iron fences, and stone walls is shaded by ancient oaks. (E-4) The district, as the accompanying photographs show, has several degrees of maintenance varying from dilapidated to excellent. Buildings generally date from the early nineteenth century to about 1930. There are few modern intrusions.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The traditional "Dumbhundred" area of Cumberland--the home of many German glass workers, brewers and others who lived in this area in the nineteenth and early twentieth century--is probably the most complex area in the city. Wright Butler, Cumberland's prolific local architect and designer of the Allegany County Courthouse, was born in this area, lived there for most of his life, and designed a number of delightful, if unpretentious, Queen Anne style houses on Columbia Street. West of Valley Street is an area which is primarily a mixture of architectural periods. George Sansbury, a local architect of some importance, appears to have been associated with a number of these pleasant, but modest homes, which are beginning to undergo inappropriate modernizations.

Some examples of mid-nineteenth century architecture exist in the district. The brick house at 313 Valley Street is one of the oldest in the district and extant on the 1858 map of the city. A Federal form house with pitched roof and corbelled brick cornice it has been altered by an early twentieth century porch and new 1/1 windows. It is, however, a well maintained example of early building in Dumbhundred. (E-5) Next-door at 311 Valley Street is the only nineteenth-century "common beer" brewery known to have survived the twentieth century. "Common beer" a lesser quality home brewed beer was popular at neighborhood taverns in Cumberland's early history. Selling for about 2¢ a glass, the beer had a tall head and was served in pitchers. Brewery tunnels and vaults still exist beneath this brick and frame structure. The 1858 map indicates that at least part of this building existed then as do accounts of local brewers. The frame portion with its high, cement-covered stone foundation may be the earliest portion. Several original windows remain. All of the windows in the brick portion have been altered in the twentieth century. The brick jack arches remain however. Like most early brick buildings in Cumberland, the brick is laid in uneven common bond courses. (E-6) This structure is an interesting architectural remnant of Cumberland's history of German brewing.¹ Valley Street contains other nineteenth century buildings. Across Walnut Street on the opposite corner from 313 Valley Street is another mid-nineteenth century house with a coursed stone foundation. Although it has been re-weatherboarded, the house contributes to the historic character of the neighborhood. The large central brick chimney and stone wall are distinctive features. Other frame and brick houses with pitched roofs line Valley Street. This combination of simple but pleasant nineteenth and twentieth-century houses form a streetscape full of interest, variety, and harmony. (E-7)

Columbia Avenue contains one of the highest concentrations of nineteenth century building still extant in the City of Cumberland. An outlying section of the city but within close proximity to the railroad, this street has the feeling of a rural community. The brick house at 615 Columbia Avenue and the small frame house at 623 Columbia Avenue are characteristic. Neither faces the street but orient toward minor access alleys for more privacy. Built to accommodate a two-story covered porch, the house at 615 Columbia Avenue is similar to several other houses in the area and is representative of a significant vernacular building tradition.

(E-8) The smaller 1½ story frame cottage at 623 Columbia Avenue with its picket fence and garden plot is also rural and vernacular in feeling and execution.

(E-9) Houses exist on these sites in 1875 indicating that both were built by that time; the 1875 map indicates houses on the sites.

Pear Street an old street perpendicular to Columbia Avenue, however, is only one block from the railroad and exhibits a more urban character. The attached nineteenth-century, brick row houses between 211 and 217 Pear Street are unique in this area. The end houses appear on the 1858 map; by 1875 the middle houses had been built as in-fill housing. Although altered with such inappropriate modernizations as aluminum siding, a picture window, louvred windows, porches, formstone, and metal awning, the houses are a significant example of nineteenth century worker housing in the scarcely populated North End at the beginning of Cumberland's industrial history. The 1½ story brick row offers tremendous potential for restoration. The loss of these buildings for any reason which are a dominant feature of Pear Street would be a tragedy. (E-10)

Henderson Avenue opposite the B & O Railroad tracks is another area with historic concentrations. Early photographs show it as having several open fields used for agriculture. Now it is densely developed. As such, it is truly representative of the impact travel and industry made on the Dumbhundred section. The 1½ story brick cottage at 525 Henderson Avenue is one of the delightful finds on this heavily traveled street. Built as a rural cottage, it remains a reminder of Cumberland's less complex past. Although the porch and standard sized windows have altered the house, it retains much of its original simplicity and integrity. Its unevenly coursed common bond brickwork is characteristic of mid nineteenth-century Cumberland. Its well maintained yard and iron fence are also distinctive. (E-11) The brick house at 619 Henderson Avenue is the most striking example in Cumberland. Extant in 1858, the house is one of a few remaining buildings of this period. Although in dilapidated condition, it retains its original small paned windows, small second-story windows, brick jack arches, corbelled brick cornice, and snow birds. The brick work, however, is in extremely poor condition. This house is attached to 617 Henderson Avenue (a later but similar house). Unfortunately 619 Henderson Avenue is being considered for demolition by the Community Development Program. Its demolition would create a gap on Henderson Avenue, diminish the historic value of adjoining 617, and increase the erosion of Henderson Avenue's historic architectural character. (E-12)

Columbia Street is probably the finest street in the district. Plagued by short-term rentals and low levels of maintenance, this street is increasingly dismissed by both public and private sectors as beyond help. Such a reaction is extreme. The decay of Columbia Street could be halted with sensitive attention to its problems. The street boasts a number of mid nineteenth-century buildings. At 222 Columbia Street is a pleasing example of the crude execution of the Greek Revival style in Cumberland. Retaining its original 6/6 window sash and snow birds, it is a rare almost undisturbed example of the detached house in the city. Although laid in common bond, the brick was laid well and the brick jack arches are uniform. (E-13) At 104 and 106 Columbia Street semi-detached houses offer varied but harmonious complements. Variations on the standard, two-story, three-bay wide, pitched roof brick house with end parapets, these houses are splendid examples of the individual architectural expression of anonymous local builders. (E-14)

The brick house at 126-128 Columbia Street is a rare example of the Italiante style in the North End. Although the three southernmost bays may date from the 1840's, the house presents a unified L-shaped, planned composition. The Italianate porch posts and lintels are distinctive as is the iron fencing. (E-15) The earthenware (probably terra cotta) chimney pots--three to a chimney, however, are the splendid features of this house. Other Columbia Street houses are said to have once had chimney pots.² Only this 2½ story house, however, has any today. (E-16) Located near the curve in Columbia Street, the house at 126-128 Columbia Street has superb streetscape quality. (E-17)

Less grand, low-style buildings also provide Columbia Street with architectural interest. The two-story brick row of 108-110-112-114 Columbia Street is a characteristic Cumberland streetscape. Shed-roofed with a bracketed cornice and corbelled segmental arches over window and door openings, this building maintains an architectural rhythm broken only by the unsightly overhead utility wires. The brick sidewalk in front of the row contributes to the visual amenity and adds textural quality to the pavement. (E-18)

Wright Butler, Cumberland's most active local architect was born in the nineteenth century house at 123 Columbia Street. Listed on the 1858 plan map of the city as "Mrs. Sprigg's property," it was commonly referred to as the "old Major Sprigg property." Kennedy H. Butler bought the property in 1877 from Judge John Coulehan. Kennedy H. Butler, father of architect Wright Butler, was the owner of Butler Furniture Company, a local furniture manufacturing operation.³ The furniture with its distinctive Victorian massing and detailing is in much demand in Western Maryland.

The Sprigg-Butler house built in the early to mid nineteenth century was the largest home of that period outside the prestigious West Side. Its spacious lawn and ancient oaks still give it an air of elegance other North End homes lack. Unlike most nineteenth-century Cumberland homes, this house has Flemish bond--not common bond--brick work.

In remodeling the old Federal style house Wright Butler added the modillioned neo-classical porch, modillioned cornice with its row of dentils, characteristic low hipped roofed dormer window, and the rear and side additions. The remodeling of the old home took place in 1925 when Butler's brother Stanley moved his undertaking establishment into the family home. After 1925 the northwest side of the house was used as a family residence and the southeast as the mortuary. A two-story morgue and a large garage for funeral cars were added to the house. The interior of the first floor was remodeled to accommodate a funeral chapel seating one-hundred, twenty-five mourners.⁴ Today, the Sprigg-Butler house has been remodeled into an apartment house. The exterior appears to be in good condition. The grounds, however, have lost the dignified landscaping appropriate to the house as a clothes line, poodle placard, and assorted bird baths have been added to the front lawn. (E-19)

Around the turn-of-the-century, Wright Butler designed several houses on Columbia and Independence Streets on and adjacent to the family holdings. His own home, he designed and had built in 1901.⁵ (Bldg. Permit issued 3/23/1901) An adaptation of the Queen Anne style, the house was designed to meet the restrictions of a narrow city lot. The 2½ story brick house demonstrates Butler's mastery of combining different materials. The long, narrow house has a wooden shingled oriel resembling a tower, a shingled gable crowning the porch, and turned wooden porch posts and spindles. The exterior brick chimney is characteristically Butler as are the conical roofed, five-sided dormer and the stone wall at the sidewalk. The multiplicity of roof angles and the interplay of various materials link the house with the widespread use of the Queen Anne style in America.

As Butler's own home, the house is of extreme importance to Cumberland's architectural history. (E-20) Butler appears to have been Cumberland's most active and most accomplished long-term resident architect. Unlike nationally recognized architect and Cumberland native Bruce Price, Wright Butler remained in Cumberland. Butler is known as the architect of the Allegany County Courthouse, a number of fine colonial Revival and Queen Anne style residences on Cumberland's finest residential street--Washington Street, the neo-classical Masonic Temple, the Liberty Trust Bank building and Schwarzenbach's Store on Baltimore Street, and approximately a hundred other structures in Cumberland. Many buildings designed by Butler have been demolished through Urban Renewal activities in recent years. A number were lost when the blocks between Frederick and Bedford Streets were cleared to make way for the railroad bridge presently under construction. The buildings which do remain are of great significance as the remaining work of Cumberland's outstanding local architect.

The 2½ story brick double house at 201-203 Columbia Street is another of Butler's designs for the family holdings. An undistinguished hipped roof house, it does, however, have characteristic Butler elements such as the blind brick windows in the center of the second story front facade and the belt course and blind brick windows on the external chimney. This house was built for Butler by contractor Louis Weber in 1909.⁶ (E-21)

Two other houses adjacent to the Butler properties are believed to have been designed by Wright Butler. The house at 117 Columbia Street, like neighboring 205 Columbia Street, is a very narrow and vertical 2½ story brick house. It has a high stone foundation similar to many known Butler houses. The first floor has one of the over-sized single paned windows with transom which Butler often used. The three bay wide second floor has a pair of tall, narrow windows and one elliptical window surrounded by an ellipse of radiating bricks. A header course runs beneath the windows. The shingled hipped roof has a deep overhang. All are present in other houses designed by Wright Butler as is the stone wall marking the front lawn.⁷ (E-22) The house at 127 Columbia Street is also believed to be Butler's design.⁸ With its high stone foundation and other similarities to 127, it is in the Butler tradition. The gable crowning the porch, however, is an unusual use of Eastlake influenced detail. (E-23) Both houses were probably built prior to 1901 when building permits were first issued since no permit appears for either house. The Butler property is enhanced by the stone walls probably designed by Wright Butler. Part of the wall has lost the characteristic row of carved stones in triangular arrow shapes. (E-24) The rest remains in its original condition. (E-25) The brick sidewalks along much of Columbia Street and the crimped metal street lights also enhance the streetscape.

Other houses on Columbia Street bear stylistic similarities to Butler's work although no documentation verifies his design. The 2½ story brick house at 118 Columbia Street, for example, could very well be the work of Butler with its shingled gable resembling a tower, dormer window, shingled gable, large cornice, and elliptical window. (E-26) Butler was the first known architect in Cumberland to use exposed concrete block as a building material. Near the family home, Butler designed two adjacent concrete block townhouses. Either built as rental houses or as a speculative building venture for A. C. Grant in 1908, the houses at 9 and 11 Independence Street were originally mirror images of one another.⁹ Simple houses, they represent the common less pretentious work of Butler. Similar to mansard-roofed builder homes of the period, they do, however, have characteristic Butler elements--quoins, delineation of the water table, two story bay windows culminating in gabled dormers, heavy cornice, and the neo-classical porch balusters still present on the 9 Independence Street house. Both appear to be sound with only the porches showing external alterations. (E-27)

Independence Street is another interesting street in the Dumbhundred district. Houses range in age from mid nineteenth century to about 1920. The late nineteenth century house at 317 Independence Street is one of the many pleasant houses along this street. A simple 2½ story frame house with its gable end facing the street, the house has a variety of elements which add interest to the streetscape: a decorative bargeboard, returned gable, moulded window lintels, and shiplapped siding. Built into the hillside, some of its rough, uncoursed stone foundation is exposed. Unlike many homes on this street, it is well maintained and in good condition. (E-28) Independence Street like Columbia still has stretches of brick sidewalk which both contribute to the historic character of the area and add visual interest to the pedestrian. The bricks are laid in a herringbone pattern. (E-29) The Dumbhundred district also has a number of pleasant and compatible bracketed, shed-roofed garages which are contemporary with many homes. One of the most outstanding is near 144 Independence Street. This one-story, brick, two-car garage was built using an unusually regular five-course common bond. It and the adjoining picket fence are handsome additions to the streetscape. (E-30)

Fine streetscapes composed of builder houses are characteristic of the Dumbhundred district. The two brick, shed-roofed houses at 204-206 and 208-210 Pear Street are representative with their stone foundations, bracketed cornices, segmental brick arches with stone keystones, recessed arched entries, and scroll-worked lintels. (E-31) Simple worker's houses laid in eight course (as are these) or unevenly coursed common bond abound in the district. They also represent the work of popular local builder George Bowman who built the houses for J. E. Utt in 1915.¹⁰

Like most sections of the City of Cumberland, rows of gabled and shed-roofed houses line the districts' streets. Columbia Avenue in the northern part of the district bears a strong resemblance to the South Cumberland district. (See District B) Both date from the early twentieth century and have a number of 2½ story, gable-roofed, brick houses. Most have shingle or slate gables with paired windows or a central Palladian Window. Porches are an important part of the composition. The eight-hundred block of Columbia Avenue, for example, has a representative sampling of such houses. (E-32) George Sansbury, local architect and contemporary of Wright Butler, provided designs for several houses in the northern part of the district. Typical of Sansbury's budget designs is the house at 813 Columbia Avenue, this frame house is similar to builder houses of the period. It does, however, have a much steeper roof than is usual, a more irregular plan than most, and a variety of architectural elements such as elliptical and oval windows, snow birds, and a seven-sided, two-story bay window with corner boards articulating each corner. (E-33)

Brick streets such as that on Shriver Avenue are rare in the district. One of the few remaining brick streets in the North end, this street is an important resource. (E-34)

Although neighborhood groceries have declined in popularity and have decreased in number in recent years, the Dumbhundred district once had a large number which were incorporated into residential buildings. Parts of several buildings remain vacant now since their commercial tenants have moved. The structure at 516-518 Shriver Avenue built in 1910 is such a building. George Bowman adapted a standard builder's pattern book house to accommodate a streetfront store.¹¹ This deteriorating 2½ story, frame building with its columned porch, symmetrically arranged facade is an undistinguished, yet integral, part of the streetscape. (E-35) This large, hip-roofed building is different from, yet compatible to, both the shingle gabled house and the bracketed, shed-roofed houses on each side. These substantial houses taken as a group possess an architectural quality as a group which none possesses individually. The house at 508 and 510 Shriver Street are also in this category. Variations of the popular gabled house, these houses create a repetitive rhythm along Shriver Avenue. 508 Shriver Avenue is an example of extravagant builder detailing. Built by George Bowman in 1909, this 2½ story house has a Palladian window in its slate shingled gable, decorative brick joining at the corners of the two-story bay windows, concrete block quoins at the end corners, and stone lintels and sills.¹² (E-36)

The area is threatened, however, with inappropriate modernizations such as those at 402 Pulaski Street. This 1901 house built by Augustus Fogtman has lost most of its distinctive detailing.¹³ Wide aluminum siding obscures its narrow wooden horizontal siding; its gable has no differentiation from the rest of the house; the windows have lost their lintels and molded architraves; and the original wooden porch posts or columns have been replaced with flimsy wrought iron porch posts. (E-37) Such insensitive modernizations erode the historic character of the area and are incompatible with such a house as the one at 315 Pulaski Street, a 1911 Fogtman house.¹⁴ It retains as do a substantial number of houses in the Dumbhundred district its original slate gable, Palladian window, columned porch, and oak doorway. (E-38)

The Dumbhundred district also has a number of compatible and appropriate commercial buildings. Some, such as the Gross Brothers building at 249 Henderson Avenue, are undistinguished. An unornamented brick building with a false stepped facade. Demolition to the south of the building has made the previously hidden concrete block wing to the rear. Typical of commercial building in Cumberland from the 1920's to the 1940's, this ordinary building is appropriate in scale,

texture, material, and setback. (E-39) In the next block at 301 Henderson Avenue is a similar, yet more refined, commercial building designed by architect Wright Butler. Its concrete block sills and lintels, dropped cornice, street front cornice, and brick corbelling add interest to the otherwise standard, brick building. Butler designed the building for Smith's Model Bakery in 1915.¹⁵ Since that time it has been altered for several adaptive uses. Several windows have been closed with brick and glass blocks damaging the integrity of the building. (E-40)

The Dumbhundred district with its complex streetscapes, brick streets, old street lights and mix of architectural styles, periods, and details is one of the most pleasing areas in the City of Cumberland. A traditional working class and German section of the city, it is of major cultural significance.

The following pages contain documented information about representative buildings within the district. This information was useful in determining ages of buildings and in identifying the architects and builders who were active within the district in certain periods. A notation of M1858 is the earliest documentation contained in the digest. Although a number of the buildings existed prior to 1858--some as early as 1790. Pre-1858 is a convenient early date to use for the remaining log, Federal, and Greek Revival style buildings built in Cumberland before the Civil War. These buildings as a group are the major surviving physical record of Cumberland's early history. A notation of M1875 indicates that a building was constructed between 1858 and 1875.

Justification for decision: (Use continuation sheet if necessary and attach map)

206 Columbia Street contributes to the Dumfries Historic District, a neighborhood noted for its mixture of architectural periods and styles and for its superb street scenes. Columbia Street is probably the finest street in the district and includes a number of houses designed by Wright Butler, a prominent Cumberland architect. 206 Columbia Street is a late Queen Anne style house distinguished by a two-story projecting bay, decorative window, columned porch and decorative woodwork. It contributes to the streetscape through design, setting, materials and feeling. Like many of the houses on the street, it retains its decorative metal fence.

Documentation on the property is presented in: Project file
